From 1831 through WWII, Fort Hamilton was the last line of defense against a naval attack on New York City.

Today, it is the only military base in New York City, and as such, it bears the responsibility of serving as first responder to any variety of natural or man-made disasters.

Technically speaking, this was a very straightforward project for FSC and involved the typical degree of specialized experience inherent to working on any military facility.

While the US Government requires a very high degree of confidentiality, their requirements do not exceed those for which we provide to every client.

This is just one of the many reasons why the world's best prime architects and engineers turn to FSC when they have specialized needs that are easier to delegate than to perform in-house.

Our relationship with STV goes back 20 years and we are very proud of it.
